A Call to Focus on Low Income Food Inflation We live in a world where food inflation can be expected throughout the year. Whether in quantity or in price, food is a commodity that is relied upon by the masses. Low income, out of the way families in cities, suburbs, and rural areas in the United States, rely on this commodity to survive. With this thought in mind, recently, the United States Department of Agriculture reported that the 2017 food price inflation rate of 5.2% was slightly higher than the past year. Despite this increase, food inflation remains low. Nevertheless, food affordability for some families is a pressing matter for the United States federal government, the Food and Drug Administration, and the farm industry. Low Income Households Face a Rising Food Inflation Threat Low income families are primarily responsible for eating food-like products on a monthly basis. Every expense must be accounted for before the money allotted to food can be used. Therefore, it is not a surprise that over two-thirds of low income households do not have a second source of income. Low income people pay a high rate of income tax as well as Social Security and Medicare taxes. They also experience high medical costs as well as have a higher propensity to live in households that are
